In 1995, a U.Va. Engineering professor and others developed a biomechanics-based automobile injury prevention program, the first of its kind in the nation.